Serbian Foreign Minister Vuk Jeremic said on Tuesday that Serbia would in the U.N. Security Council advocate the continuation of the Kosovo talks, the finding of a compromise solution and the preservation of the country's territorial integrity and sovereignty.

Jeremic said that in the coming period Serbia would be under dramatic pressure from all sides, and added that the country had a principled and solid position regarding its future in Europe and Kosovo's future status.

He went on to say that Serbia was going through a delicate time, and needed to put all efforts into preserving state unity and a common policy on Kosovo.

The foreign minister voiced hope that the U.N. Security Council would decide that the dialogue should continue, as unilateral decisions were dangerous, of which a growing number of countries were aware.

On Tuesday evening, Jeremic departed for New York, where he will talk with U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-moon and the ambassadors of the Security Council member states.
